Valentines through the ages. The tradition of Valentine’s Day has a long history originating in the 15th Century. This display shows examples of valentine cards from the Georgian era when valentines were regularly sent, the Victorian era: the “golden age” of valentines which saw huge increase in their usage and finally the use of telegrams as valentines up to the 1960s. The tradition of sending Valentines was given a boost by the Postal Reforms of 1839 (cheap postage) and the advances in producing lace paper and chromolithography pictures demonstrated at the 1851 Great Exhibition of the Works of Industry of All Nations. Great Britain and America were the most prolific senders of Valentines. The sending of Valentine cards did not become common place until the early 19th century as prior to that it was the practice to give expensive presents as a “love token”.
